The Third Essential of a Banking Home

To you who seek an assured success in business without undue risk, there is a fundamental suggestion in the sight of a large ship putting out to sea.

No sailor, inexperienced and alone, would brave the uncertainties and dangers of such a voyage; but under the seasoned guidance of captain and pilot, ocean travel has become safe and sure.

In business also, to those who proceed from the first under the guidance of experienced banking counsel, risks steadily become less and the assurance of success greater.

In all your business and financial affairs, maintain an intimate relationship with a strong bank like the Union Trust Company, to whose officers your problems are neither new nor difficult. Our 55 years of accumulated experience in counseling commercial enterprises is always generously at the service of the Bank's customers. Tonight In The Loop

I Great is Chicago and worthy of the greatness of the city is the heart thereof-the Loop.

I So vibrant in the daytime with the oscillations of commerce that all things other than trade seem out of place, the Loop, after sunset, is inhabited by a different kind of people.

I For the Loop now, even more than ever before, is the great recreation center of those who, of an evening, seek pastime worth while.

Not that worth-while pastime reigns supreme, for even in these days of intimate regulation of personal conduct by the government folly still beckons from within the Loop, as well as from without.

I But upon the whole, those who would invest, rather than spend, their time in entertainment remain within the Loop at close of business or journey there later.

And each evening, at dinner time. and again at late supper time, you may see at Henrici's a goodly number of those who habitually seek substantial and worth-while return for their outlay of time and money.

Why not Henrici's before or after the theater tonight?

TRAFFIC TALKS No. 19 CHICAGO MOTOR CLUB

Physicians' Privileges in Traffic

Fire apparatus and police patrols are given the right-of-way when in the performance of duty. This is a necessary regulation. But how about the physician on an emergency call? A life often hangs in the basance while his car is being held up by traffic signals and officers.

Chicago has an ordinance that allows certain privileges to regularly licensed physicians, but it is doubtful if all physicians or all police officers are aware of this privilege.

The ordinance says that all ambulances The ordinance says that all ambulances shall have the right-of-way when conveying a person to a hospital or proceeding to the scene of an accident. An amendment fostered by the Chicago Medical Society and the Chicago Motor Club provides that physicians having the proper permit and insignia shall have a like night-of-way. The permit and insignia may be obtained from the city collector on payment of Physicians should be allowed to run traffic signals when on an emergency call, if there is no danger of collision. The various park boards, we believe, should take cognizance of this condition and pass regulations in the park districts giving physicians the right-of-way.

The physician should be favored when on an emergency call, and we may rely on the profession to observe all regu-lations on other occasions.

We should like to hear the opinions of physicians and public officials.

"O!" and now Rod was sitting on the edge of his chair, tensely alert.

"Then your host has deserted you again?"

"He must have received a message late last night," Marian explained.

"This morning he did not appear. He left word that he had gone to his other post. Mattawa, is it?"

For a moment Rod remained on the edge of his chair, and then he threw himself back and laughed.

"You know Nee-bau-bee-nis, Beth," he said. "You saw him, Marian. Head guide of the brigade. He came into the shop this afternoon with that Again in Need of Direction

Marian suddenly became aware that Both was tense in her chair and that something had happened of which she was unconscious.

Marian remained at the Norwood post for supper that night, but immediately after the meal Rod excused himself and went over to the trade shop. George Paul was there waiting for him.

"Who went with him?" Rod asked.

"He take a letter?" the half-breed asked.

"Maybe, but keep it quiet. They won't start until after dark."

"Say, what you going to do about these hunters?" George demanded.
"They no hunt, they no fish. Your father never let them stay around the post like this. Pretty soon they have so much debt they can't pay."

"What do you think dad would have done?" Rod asked.

"He tell them to go away and they go," was the positive answer.

Rod did not reply. He went out the door and, to George's amazement, down to the shore and paddled across the bay to The Spider's post. Only he did not stop at the trade shop or dwelling house, but went on past to the hig gospel tent in which the Indians were beginning to gather for the evening services. There he sat down at the rear, unobserved by the Rev. Mr. Sharman, who was tinkering with a small portable organ. In a few minutes the tent was packed and the services began.

Bod grinned when he saw Jim, the tall half-breed, stand up beside the preacher. Sharman announced a hymn, in English, and Jim interpreted. Then the missionary sat down at the organ and played and sang it.

A prayer followed. The impassioned words, delivered by a beautiful voice, had an effect upon the Indians, despite the pauses in which the half-breed, bored, surly, and omitting entire passages, conveyed something of the thought in Ojibwa. There was another hymn and then the sermon.

Rod himself was moved by the beauty of Sharman's voice, and yet he saw at once that the man was not an orator, exhorting and driven by emotion, but a marvelous reader, one as skilled in the use of his vocal cords as a master violinist with the bow. The Indians responded to it, were swayed for the moment, for they love resonant words, and even Jim's mumbled and sketchy interpretation failed to lessen their absorption. They were thrilled, not by a religious excitement, but wholly by the mellifuous cadence of seductive tones.

When the Indians rose for the last hymn Rod slipped outside. The

Interest in Recital

Mona Redman put a more than common touch of interest into her pland recital at Kimball hall last night by playing the Juon Sonatina, a new work hereabouts, and an unusually entertaining one. It is the work of a composer who has plenty of good melody at his command and is not afraid to show it, decorated and emphasized with a tang of pleasantly acidulated modernism. It is a contribution to music in a time when much of it is merely gesture.

Regarding the argument that such an amendment will remove the specific discriminatory provisions for instance, the fact that women are forbidden to work in mines in the state of Illinois which necessarily will arise from the adoption of the equal rights bill, in order that the women of Illinois may have the right to work in the coal mines.

music in a time when much of it is merely gesture.

Before this Miss Redman, with better musicianship than psychology, had rather too slowly developed a climax, beginning with a pair of Brahms' works on an overly low emotional plane and working up to a more than commendable performance of Chopin. She has excellent abilities; her program would have shown better stage managership if she had demonstrated that fact in the beginning instead of waiting fifteen or twenty minutes for it to become apparent.

Immediate distribution of food and clothing among the thousands of destitute Germans, and gradual revision of the peace treaty to restore Germany, "an equal among equals," was the twofold plan advocated last night by Frau Adele Schrieber of the German reichstag, speaking before the Woman's Trade Union league at King's restaurant. NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—For the spring afternoon wedding the mother of the bride can be sure of adding good form to romance by the choice of crèpe for her gown. The material used here is a dull crèpe of madonna blue, and the lattice trimming along one side of the slightly draped tubular front is of self material. THE new interport and round the world service of the Dollar Steamship Line offers unique and valu-able advantages to all travellers.

Seven great sister steamships—President Ships—have recently been commissioned to make 21 important ports on a regular fortnightly schedule.

This means dependable travel, as is attested by the fact that the U. S. Government has commissioned these ships to carry the U. S. Mail. It's speedy, too. The complete circuit of the globe requires but 110 days, which includes sufficient time at each port of call for short trips to the interior

Thus, leaving New York, you may visit Havana, the Panama Canal, the Pacific Coast, the Orient and continue to the British Straits Settlements. Alexandria. While you are in port (except during the week at New York) the ship is your hotel without additional Use what part of the service you choose. Tickets are sold for all or any part of the trip.

But the one feature that has never before been offered to the public is the optional stopover previlege. In any land that particularly interests you, remain for two weeks, four weeks or longer.

When you are ready to continue, another Dollar Steamship will be at your service providing accommo-dations and comforts exactly like those on the ship on which you started.

Thus you enjoy a flexibility of travel that until now has never been available except on a private yarht. You go as rapidly or as leisurely as you choose. Here is the trip supreme, the one of which you have always dreamed. Take it now.

And you can go now, for the entire cost of this voyage is but little, if any, more than your ordinary home

Plan now to see the world—its rare beauties, its strange sights. Visit other lands and other peoples. Mail the coupon and receive complete details. Or call at the Dollar Steamship Line office or at any local ticket or tourist agent.

Here is the finest trip of all made economical, flexible, easy and convenient.

The blizzard slowed up most things pretty badly, but some people defied it successfully. Tribune Want Ads enabled them to rent and sell almost as usual regardless of weather conditions.

Just one example was that of Mr. John Kelly, 2717 W. Sixty-third street. He advertised as follows in The Tribune of Tuesday, February 5:

Mistakes for Which Your Heirs Pay

Probably no class of people suffer so much from the financial mistakes of others as the beneficiaries of estates.

In the first place, the executor-trustee, if an individual, seldom has the experience and training which so specialized a task really requires. He may be a good business man and still know little or nothing about the steps to be taken, the investment and accounting involved in managing a trust fund.

In the second place, mistakes may be made from lack of careful attention. The executor-trustee is not handling his own property. The task may be an unwelcome burden; in conflict with affairs of his own.

An individual, serving largely from motives of friendship, cannot well be held responsible for even culpable mistakes. The heirs pay for them.

This would not be true if the property were in our hands as either executor or trustee. Organized carefulness and expert attention would reduce mistakes to a minimum; and our relation to the property would not be sentimental; it would be businesslike, with financial responsibility behind it.
